Why Attend This Conference?

The documentary Paper Tigers sparked renewed interest in the effects of chronic, overwhelming stress and trauma on adolescent development. Trauma-informed care in juvenile justice services is emphasized more than ever. To the point that the U.S. Attorney General's Task Force on Children Exposed to Violence recommended to make trauma-informed screening, assessment and care the standard in juvenile justice services. Yet, most in the industry still struggle to understand the impacts of trauma on brain development in a concrete and tangible way. This conference will provide concrete strategies that operationalize what brain science tells us will be most effective. If you want to know more about how trauma impacts the brain and what to do about it, please join us for this exciting conference.
